DANGEROUS SCHEME

James B. Donovan, New York attorney who engineered the Bay of Pigs ransom deal, now says he's going to help negotiate a hostage deal with the Kremlin.

Dreamed up by a Bronx advertising man, this plan calls for exchanging—permanently, as we get it—some 30 to 50 Americans for as many Russians. Some of these hostages would be relatives of high U. S. and Russian public officials.

Trade Hostages With Kremlin?

The idea is that this trade of human beings would discourage the two nations from throwing nuclear hardware at each other.

The fact that Communists give not a hoot in hell for individual human lives, while we consider them precious, is enough in itself to condemn this scheme. Let's have nothing to do with it.
